

Poroshenko offers anticorruption chamber. IMF stays strict about the independent court

14.09.2017

In the meantime, President Poroshenko keeps persuading the international partners that Ukraine does not need an anticorruption court. During his speech at YES Conference 2017 Poroshenko asked Western leaders to raise their hands if they have anticorruption courts in their countries. Then he referred to the experience of Kenia and Uganda where similar courts exist. In the end, he claimed that anticorruption chamber can be established next month.

Needless to remind that it was Poroshenko himself who submitted the Law on Judiciary that already envisages establishment of the anticorruption court. Our arguments on misleading statements that anticorruption chambers are faster to establish and more efficient.
